

The Creative Writing Class at Andrew College had a treat last week when the publisher, associate editor and two writers from the Southwest Georgia Living magazine came to talk with them. Students had an opportunity to ask questions in a group, as well as meet with the individuals one on one. Bobby Dews, Andrew College Writer in Residence, and Dr. Lela Phillips, Professor of English, coordinators of the Creative Writing Class, organized the presentation.

Quinn Cook, Publisher, spoke to the group regarding the startup of the magazine as well as the day to day workings. K.K. Snyder provided a writer's point of view as well as an associate editor's. Tom Seegmueller and O.Vic Miller both spoke completely from the writer's perspectives.

The session was well received by the students and the faculty who attended. All of the speakers told the students how they had their start in publishing and writing. They also offered helpful advice to future writers, poets and editors.

O. Victor Miller presented his book, One Man's Junk, to Pitts Library. A reception was held for the group to meet informally with the students, faculty and staff.
