Guest lecturer at Andrew College brings bees and beekeeping to life

CUTHBERT, GA. – David Knight, a Dawson beekeeper and owner of Honey Pucker Farms, was a guest lecturer in Andrew College’s Introduction to Sustainable Agriculture Class on November 7. His lively discussion ranged from the importance of pollinators to the life cycle of bees to collecting and bottling his honey in his home business.

Nataliya Apanovich, assistant professor of sustainable agriculture, commented “Mr. Knight knew how to captivate students’ attention with his charismatic account of beekeeping. His knowledge about bees is wide ranged, personal and well-researched. I hope to continue hosting guest speakers so that my students can have a unique opportunity to learn from the experts in the field of sustainable agriculture and food systems.”
